The spasmodic German attacks against front has been very heavy, probably the one or two points of the Allied line have heaviest since the Allies' attacks in Arton now developed into something like general and Champagne at the end of September activity all along the French and British last. It is also plain that at one point fronts. Nowhere on the British front have the enemy's efforts schieved anything more than a momentary success; but at one point on the French front, south of the Somme, the Gormans have made an appearance of Frise, on the French side of the Somme. They also claim to have taken prisoners nearly a thousand unwounded men. It seems to denote rather a change from that attitude of passive from another they may be welcomed as defence to which the Germans have been showing that the German Staff feels the restricted during the winter to an attitude of active defence. There is a variety of strategic advantage to be gained is very reasons why it may be doubted whether the enemy contemplate anything in the nature of a real offensive movement. One reason is that, at this season of the year, the condition of the ground is such as, if not to prohibit, at least to make very difficult, the development of major operations. Another reason is that the Allied lines are now of tremendous strength. The German public was getting out of hand, and had to be appeased with news of tremendous strength. The German public was getting out of hand, and had to be appeased with news attempt to breach them would require the greatest effort the enemy has yet put forth in any field of war, and such an effort on the western front is not in their power at this moment, when they are still far from having disposed of their preoccupations in the east. On the other hand, the nature is repeating itself. Even the form having disposed of their preoccupations in the east. On the other hand, the nature is repeating itself. The securations which lied to the invasion of Serbia was repoating itself. The enemy jets at Corfu, telegraphing yesterday, Parkis, Sarcunay.

The preservation of the moral both of the people and the Army prohibits adherence too long to a passive rôle; nor is an attitude of inactivity calculated to maintain the glamour of German military prowess for the benefit of such neutrals as are for the benefit of such neutrals as are such as the property of t The report that the United States for the benefit of such neutrals as are still subject to it. But the enemy's present activity is doubtless intended to serve as well a strict military function. Just as there is in politics a doctrine of "preventive" war, to which the Germans chiefly introduced us, so there is in strategy a doctrine of "preventive" attack, equally congenial to the German military genius. The story comes from prisoners passing through Kieff that the Germans have sent to the southern Russian front "the last word in the substant of the southern Russian front "the last word in heavy ordnance" in the shape of 25 inch guns. There have certainly been reports in circulation for some time past that Krupashave been making a weapon which would greatly exceed in size and effectiveness the fire of the farnous I'-inch Howitzer. It must also be noticed that the prisoners give circumstantial details about the construction of the platforms necessary for such enormous regimes of war. Thousands of skilled work, men, they assert, have been sent to the front for this employment.
